

The Anthropology of Money - an undergraduate project

Date : December 4, 2006

This is a link to undergraduate projects studying the anthropology of money in Southern California, as part of a class in the anthropology of money, taught by Bill Maurer at University of California, Irvine. There are links to student's research into virtual world communities, feng shui, strip clubs and wishing wells. This is an excellent example of getting undergraduates involved in original research and thinking through the complex and hybrid nature of money in our own cultures as well as those more conventionally studied in anthropology at undergraduate level.
