

Theorizing the Contemporary - Finance Special Issue

Date : June 24, 2012

Cultural Anthropology has just launched a new Theorizing the Contemporary Forum . The forum on "Finance", guest edited by Bill Maurer, features eighteen essays on topics such as risk, debt, ethics, infrastructure and more. You can visit the entire forum here, <http://culanth.org/?q=node/561>

For an Anthropology of Atmospheric Markets: The Exemplary Case of Financial Markets Michel Callon, Csi Ecole des mines de Paris

"Smart Targeting" and the Meaning of Money Marieke de Goede, University of Amsterdam

Community and Money, Local and European Luigi Doria, Centre Maurice Halbwachs (CNRS – EHESS – ENS), Paris Luca Fantacci, Bocconi University, Milan

The Passions of Credit and the Dangers of Debt Julia Elyachar, University of California - Irvine

Life in Financial Calendrics Jane I. Guyer, Johns Hopkins University

The "Real Economy" and its Pariahs: Questioning Moral Dichotomies in Contemporary Capitalism Ellen Hertz, University of Neuchatel, Stefan Leins, University of Zurich

Occupy Finance and the Paradox/Possibilities of Productivity Karen Ho, University of Minnesota

The Fear Index and Frankenstein Finance Paul Langley, Department of Geography, Durham University, UK

What can anthropologists of finance teach us about the MERS we now find ourselves in Vincent Antonin Lepinay

The End of Finance? Hirokazu Miyazaki, Cornell University

Coping with the Discount Rate Fabian Muniesa, Centre de Sociologie de l'Innovation, Mines ParisTech, Paris

Why does (or doesn't) finance need an anthropology? Horacio Ortiz, Centre de Sociologie de l'Innovation, Mines ParisTech, Paris

Why does finance need an anthropology?...Because financial value is a reality. Martha Poon, New York University

Joining the Dots Michael Pryke, Open University

Is this capitalism? If not, then what is it? Annelise Riles, Cornell University

A Dispatch from the Future (of Money and Technology Summit) Lana Swartz, University of Southern California

'An Anthropologist on Wall Street' Gillian Tett, Financial Times

The Ethics of Wall Street Caitlin Zaloom, New York University